The uncertainty of the great came of racing was it ver better mustrated than at Guttenburg yesterday. Before the races commenced the talent were almost willing to wager that every race would go to the favorite. On paper if seemed so, but when the last race was over the smart ones were not willing to bet that they were alive. Repeater was the first favorite to go down. His backers were bet very confident that he would win, however, and his price receded from 7 to 5 to 11 oh at the close. The second race found Woodchopper a red-hot favorite.
